

CCC Newsletter # 02-14

Welcome to the February issue! Finally some shows are starting to come in, thanks for your submissions, they are appreciated.

As you may be aware, 2014 is the 50th anniversary of the first true muscle car, the Pontiac GTO. We will be seeing a lot of shows saluting the GTO, and one of note will be in Southern California on March 8. Plan on going to the Automobile Driving Museum in El Segundo and meeting the "God Father". More details below in the calendar.

You will also want to keep in mind, the Pontiac/Oakland Western Regional Convention coming up September 25-28 at the Pines Resort at Bass Lake. Go to: www.pontiacsofcentralcalifornia.org for more info. And, bounce this newsletter back to me with "Pontiac" in the subject line and I'll add you to the convention update email list.

This year also celebrates the 50th Anniversary of the Pony Car . . . the Ford Mustang! I've only received one submission for a Mustang anniversary show, and I know there must be plenty more, so please send them in!

And now before the shows, how about some automotive trivia!

- Henry Ford gets a lot of credit for his early innovations; but was he the first to offer commercially made autos in the U.S.? If not he, whom then?

And, a bonus trivia question;

- I'm a huge NASCAR fan (Go Kasey Kayne!), but what about way way before NASCAR; the roots of racing? So the question is, what was the first automobile race in the U.S.; and where did it take place?

As always, answers after the shows.

So without further adieu . . .

And now the answers to the trivia questions;

- Who was he the first to offer commercially made autos in the U.S.?
Duryea Motor Wagon Company

On September 20 1893, the Duryea brothers' first automobile was constructed and successfully tested on the public streets of Springfield, Massachusetts. Charles Duryea founded the Duryea Motor Wagon Company in 1896, the first company to manufacture and sell gasoline powered vehicles. By 1896, the company had sold thirteen cars of the model Duryea, an expensive limousine, which remained in production into the 1920s.

- What was the first automobile race in the U.S.; and where did it take place?

America's First Automobile Race

At 8:55 am on November 28, 1895, six motor cars left Chicago's Jackson Park for a 54 mile race to Evanston, Illinois and back . . . through the snow! Car Number 5 driven by inventor Frank Duryea, won the race in just over 10 hours at an average speed of 7.3 mph . . . a far cry from what we'll see at Daytona on February 23!

And now a little “Creative Licience”!

February 2014

This first section is especially for the ladies. Here are some strange license plates that you will enjoy, I hope. What woman would be attracted to any of these drivers? I'm giving you help on some, but you can figure out the rest.
